There was a girl named Nomsa. She was staying in Pretoria. She had light skin and long plaited hair.

Nomsa loved to pray and read the Bible.

She was the leader of the Sunday school class at church.

One day it was raining a lot, and she was running late for church. She cried and was very sad.

Her friend, with whom she went to church, came with two umbrellas so that they could go to church together.

They both walked together to church. They were able to arrive on time and she was very happy.

When they arrived, the church service started. Nomsa led the church members in a song with a sweet melody, and the church followed her, singing loudly. They prayed, and the pastor shared the word of God for the day.

When the pastor started to preach, Nomsa took all the children and started the service as a Sunday school teacher. She taught them about manners and the word of God. The church came out, and Nomsa was happy.
