‘A Vast Hour: After Genevieve Taggard’
Author: Rowland Bagnall
DOI: 10.14324/111.1755-4527.128

MoreableType is a Graduate, Peer-Reviewed Journal based in the Department of English at UCL.

© 2021 Rowland Bagnall. This is an Open Access article distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution License (CC-BY) 4.0 https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by/4.0/, which permits unrestricted use, distribution, and reproduction in any medium, provided the original author and source are credited.
A Vast Hour
after Genevieve Taggard

Now only is there certainty for me / When all the day’s distilled and understood – the moon drives at the present – the light from here un-yous you.

I want to shoot myself in the face with love – a beautiful thing in a strange and beautiful place. Something something “sweet unrest” – the huge night an enclosure.

So stir my thoughts at this slow, solemn time –
the short-haul flights of evening: beacons of winter, continuous air – what if you could read up on the day’s thoughts about you?

Strike up music! Scope tomorrow’s printless straits!
I slice the tomatoes, saving their skins – their seeds freckle the countertop. No ideas but in No ideas but in things – tell me about it...

I stand and watch the pewter darkness. Snow here is self-cancelling. Muscular planets, unread
-able moon – now that’s what I call emptiness!

Cast your minds back – dredge it up: ice on the river, mud on the trees, dataless for many miles.
I sleep and I dream of the previous year – and possibly (I hope) the next.
Now light meets darkness: now my tendrils climb / In this vast hour – wilderness backwards, wilderness on. Release the hounds of opal night, whatever you think that means.

This much I do know: light on the housetops, alluvial plains, the old heart and its loyalties.
  And the evening disa
-ppearing – first the ending, now the end.