

Evangelicals and Politics in America Today

Key findings from "The Politics of Religion" study (2020-2022)

A Divided Country

Evangelicals from across the political spectrum agree that division is one of, if not the number one issue facing the country

The cause of the division and solution for fixing it remain contested, though many point to the media as a key driver furthering division

Pastors Feel Increasing Pressure

Some have left the pastorate as a result

I feel like I have to choose my words really, really carefully. Even if I'm quoting scripture, I have to be careful about how I quote it.

Blame a hyper-politicised environment

Especially when it comes to the issue of race in America, many pastors want to champion racial equality but may receive critique from white congregation members

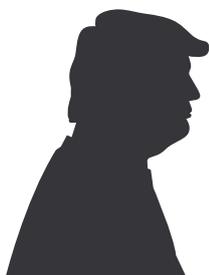

EQUALITY

Evangelicals & Trump

Donald Trump remains a divisive figure amongst evangelicals

Since 2020, many evangelicals have distanced themselves from him, instead supporting other GOP candidates (e.g. Senator DeSantis)

Even when evangelicals do not like him, they admit to voting for him

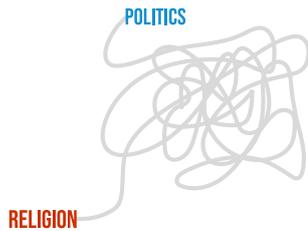

There was no better alternative

And/or his policies overrode his personality

He furthered "Christian values"

Differences in How Evangelicals View the Religious-Political Relationship

The two have become entangled and not all evangelicals like this entanglement

"Which is more important:
A political identity
or Christian identity?"

Abortion Remains a Top Issue

It's often not seen as a political issue but rather a "moral" or "Biblical" issue

This was a major reason many evangelicals voted for Trump in both 2016 and 2020, despite misgivings about his personality or personal behavior

The opposition to abortion is more strongly held by Christian leaders (including pastors) than Christian laypeople, who hold different views on when and how abortion should be illegal

Immigration: Views Are Split

Evangelical leaders tend to hold more pro-immigration beliefs, whereas laypeople tend to hold more anti-immigration beliefs

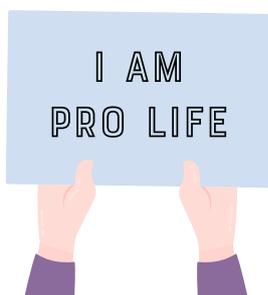

Those who hold anti-immigration beliefs tend to be more active, organized and involved in politics

Youth Activism is a Major Channel for Evangelicalism-Politics

Political organizations pro-actively court conservative youths and combine evangelical values with political beliefs

(e.g. abortion)

economic issues
(e.g. promoting capitalism)

8

Freedom & Faith

There is an increased importance placed on freedom since 2016. For example:

Freedom to use guns

Protect Christians' rights

Medical freedom from vaccination and masking mandates

Freedom from the government

A Heavy Emphasis on Protection of Children

Including sex-education programs taught in school, Critical Race Theory (CRT), and all Covid-19 mandates, including mandatory mask-wearing

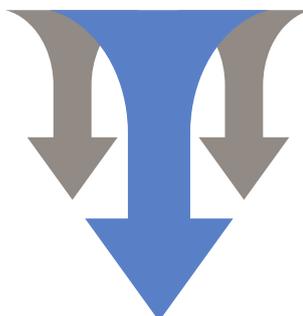

This discourse links to conspiracy groups such as QAnon

10

Evangelicals Feel Increasingly Victimized and Attacked Since 2016

By liberals, liberal values, non-believers, and even so-called "progressive Christians"

And point toward the decreasing number of evangelicals in the country to demonstrate their minority status

Some frame this in spiritual terms as a "holy war" against "Satanic forces"
