At Madibogo village, there was a very smart girl at school. Her name was Amogelang.
Her mother, Ntswaki, was not working. They survived on pension money, and with that money, Ntswaki made sure that her daughter went to school.
Amogelang took her studies very seriously as it was her responsibility to learn.
The teachers were very proud of her schoolwork.
Amogelang managed to pass matric, and that made her family happy.
Her friend became jealous, and that made Amogelang very sad.
A year after finishing matric, Amogelang was hired at the mines in Rustenburg.
The situation in Amogelang’s family began to improve. She took on the responsibility of caring for her mother because she was getting old.
Amogelang built a house for her mother, and it made Ntswaki happy.
