There was a boy named Reabetsoe. He lived in Extension 38, and his dream was to visit Cape Town to see the ocean.
Every day he wondered if his dream would ever come true.
Taking a trip by plane costs a lot of money. Reabetsoe asked his parents to make his dream come true, but Reabetsoe’s parents did not have money for him to visit Cape Town.
He was very sad. One day there was a spelling competition. The winner would be given a chance to take a trip on a plane to Cape Town.
Reabetsoe won the spelling competition. As the winner, they paid for him to take a trip on a plane. He was very happy and his heart was filled with joy.
At Cape Town, Reabetsoe and two other selected learners went to different places. They went to learn about the rights and responsibilities of a learner to protect oceans and the animals that live in the sea.
They went to a place called “Two Oceans Aquarium” where they could see different types of animals that live in the sea. Reabetsoe was very happy when he saw a shark for the first time.
They learned that you have the right to go to the ocean and the responsibility to keep it clean because you could endanger the animals.
Reabetsoe and two other learners were each given a baby penguin to take back home. They were very happy.
When Reabetsoe got back home, he told his parents about the amazing trip he had had. He was very happy and told them he would remember it for the rest of his life.
