Jabu and Pule were twins. They were born without legs.
They used wheelchairs to get around.
Jabu and Pule were always sad because they could not do what they loved most: playing soccer.
They could see that they were different from other kids and felt worthless.
When their mother realised her twins were unhappy, she took them to the hospital and asked the doctors to give them prosthetic legs.
The doctor gave them prosthetic legs.
Now, Jabu and Pule can walk with prosthetic legs and realise they are special in their own way.
They enjoy being able to do what they love, which is play soccer.
