In a village called Matshepe, there was a woman called Naomi.
Naomi had a daughter called Dimpho.
Dimpho had two children, a boy and a girl called Tshepo and Oboitshepo.
Tshepo and Oboitshepo loved to fight as if they were not brother and sister.
They stayed with their grandmother because their mother was working.
The grandmother kept scolding them all the time. They did not listen.
Grandmother Naomi felt sad because she loved her grandchildren and raised them with love.
One day, grandmother Naomi called her grandchildren. She told them how they should treat each other because they were brother and sister.
Tshepo and Oboitshepo asked for forgiveness and promised to behave well.
They started to live peacefully and got along with each other. The grandmother was happy to see her grandchildren love each other and treat each other well.
